They include the cases of Harry McElaney and Albert Wendling, Darby, charged with burglary; Ennio Farge, Bristol, burglary; Stephen Sincak, larceny; Walter Mattson, driving an automobile after his license had been revoked; Edwin Longenour and Charles Sharrer, larceny and receiving stolen goods; George Eschbacher, possessing intoxicating liquor for leverage purposes; Jacob Keller, non-support of parent; Howard H. The auditor directed that Perkasio pay to East Rockhill Township, as the result of the annexation of land, the sum of $152.56. If no objections are filed the report will be confirmed.

Mary Pemberton Gintler Heyler, of Bucks County, was granted a divorce from Willis Atkinson Heyler, of Gloucester, on grounds of desertion. In the divorce proceedings of Laura, of 321 North Pennsylvania avenue, Morrisville, against David Oliver South, of 232 Spring street, Trenton, the master filed his report. Cruel and barbarous treatment is the grounds for the divorce.

TWENTY-FIVE MARKET BAGS AND OTHER GIFTS ARE TO BE GIVEN AWAY EACH NIGHT DURING COURIER'S COOKING SCHOOL HERE NEXT WEEK

Hostess on Wednesday Evening Will Be Mrs. Percy G. Ford, of Jackson Street—Keen Interest Shown in Four-Night Affair When Miss Burroughs Demonstrates

Each night of the Courier's cooking and homemaker's school, there will be given away absolutely free a number of gifts, and a set of 25 market bags, with provisions.

Keen interest is being shown in the forthcoming session of the school in St. James's parish building, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings of next week, when Miss Grace Burroughs, of the DeBoth organization, will lecture.

The hostess on Wednesday evening will be Mrs. Percy G. Ford, of Jackson street.

This second annual cooking school in Bristol recalls the saying that the French housewife can teach her family on what the average American family wastes. Many of us can take lessons from the French, who for generations have been famous as much for their economy as for their great culinary success.

"Perhaps American waste has been exaggerated," says Miss Burroughs, "but there is enough truth in it to set us thinking. Good food need not be expensive food and some of the best cooks I know are the most economical."

The simple foods are often the best and most popular foods. The lecturers of the DeBoth schools have long gone on that basis. The overhead of a family kitchen can be made a threatening giant by waste. Waste in the kitchen is not a matter of desire but a matter of kitchen and cooking ignorance. Every cake, pie or other dish that is spoiled is a liability that need not have been.

Miss Burroughs has an answer. First she asserts there is no excuse, or dishes to fail. No dish properly mixed and cooked will fail. Cookery is chemistry and chemistry is an exact science. It isn't the dish that fails, she holds, it's the cook. She teaches absolute assurance.

The most favored home-made dishes often represent very little expense in the making. Gone are the days of 12 egg cakes, the days when the simplest baking called for pounds of butter and quarts of cream, when the farm products were used in such quantities "to save them." With our indoor life we need less fuel than did our grandparents and we have grown accustomed to a less rich diet. Then, too, modern refrigeration and transportation have helped solve our problems—keeping our foods fresh and sweet far beyond the expectation of housewives of old.

Most men prefer simple, substantial dishes and are skeptical for too many "trills." Miss Burroughs states that the DeBoth schools have made a specialty of just such cooking—but warns against the danger of relaxing our care in preparing them. Like the lighter and more delicate dishes they must be pleasing to the taste and to the eye and served in sufficient variety to tempt the appetite and urge one to come back for more.

For such occasions as light lunches, or bridge parties, and other affairs where food offerings are not desired to build brawn or muscle, Miss Burroughs concedes the value of daintiness, but she still holds to the common sense of making the daintiness consistent with digestive values.

AUTHORESS SEES FILM WHEN RESCUE IS OVER

Thrilling Day Ends With Movies in Sailors'
Quarters

BY JOAN LOWELL

Eight days Joan Lowell spent with the Coast Guardsmen, and this is the fourth of a series of stories and thrills by the romantic authoress who was born aboard ship and who recounted her seafaring girlhood in the story, "Cradle of the Deep." The first woman ever permitted to be a part of the dangerous work performed by the Coast Guard, Joan Lowell received special permission from Washington for the purpose.

By Joan Lowell

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—I was no Jonah on my cruise on the Coast Guard Cutter Mojave, for after the toll of the night, picking up the schooner Harry G. Deering, the wind and sea relaxed by dawn. Morning came with a quiet sea, and a sun which belied the gloom of the night before.

I stowed my hold with coffee, toast and other victuals and rushed on deck. Astern, skimming along at the end of the huge hawser, was the four-master. We were about nine hours' towing time from Boston harbor—I knew the families of the crew on the Deering would be anxious for news of them, so I asked Capt. Parker if I could go in the lifeboat with the boarding party.

"Yes, you may," he answered. "There is a routine boarding of every vessel we assist. In that way we obtain for our records the name of the vessel, captain, owners, cargo and amount of loss or damage."

Without a quail, I asked one of the quartermasters if he could enlist for me from the crew one of the regulation blue uniforms. He went below and presently emerged with a blouse from a gunner and a pair of trousers from a sailor.

When we pulled alongside the schooner, the mate on board lowered a Jacob's ladder for us to ascend to the deck.

"Good morning, Captain," I greeted the white-haired, weather-beaten skipper. Captain Sweeney blinked his eyes. "Are you a girl?"

"Yes, sir," I answered. "Well, lass, I ain't closed my eyes for 30 hours—what with riding out that gale off the Cape and losing my sails and the ship leaking—six and a half feet of water in her hold, she had and I thought my lamps were deceiving me. I didn't know there were women on coast guards!" and he grinned contentedly.

"I have been sailing this coast for high on to forty years. I been around Cape Horn—but give me the Horn any time to the blow we got off Cape Cod." (Continued on Page 4)

ENROLLMENT INCREASES

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Nov. 6.—

Transportation for pupils of Bensalem Township public schools from their homes to the school houses, which this year proved to be a big problem, was reported as working out nicely, when the school board members gathered last evening for a meeting. Owing to closing of three schools this year, it was found necessary to use three buses. A fourth may be placed in service.

The seven members held the session in the high school building, here, with Jacob Scheufele presiding.

Report of the operation of the cafeteria at the high school, an innovation during the past month, showed that the cafeteria proved self-supporting the first month of operation. Teachers state they note marked improvement in the reaction of students to their studies, owing to the opportunity to secure warm food at noon-time. For small sums the pupils are able to purchase hot dishes for lunch each day.

Enrollment in all buildings has increased within the past few weeks, owing to a number of new families moving into the territory.

Teachers of the township schools will attend the Teachers' Institute at Doylestown next week.

TELLS OF HEALTH WORK BEING DONE IN COUNTY

Rotarians Hear Address of C.
T. Brazington at Weekly Meeting

PROGRESS IS SHOWN

Some idea of the work which the Pennsylvania Tuberculosis Society, of which there is a branch in Bucks County, is doing in fighting this dread disease, was given to Bristol Rotarians yesterday by C. T. Brazington, field secretary of the state organization.

Mr. Brazington gave an interesting and instructive talk to the Rotarians and outlined plans which his society has for the future.

The speaker brought right home the need for the work here and told of the dangers of having children infected with tuberculosis associated with other children.

Mr. Brazington has been assigned to Bucks County for a period of six weeks, to aid the drive for the sale of Christmas seals and in perfecting other details of the county organization.

Today, he said, the outlook for fighting tuberculosis is better than ever before, because people are not so badly frightened—they know that it can be controlled and cured. To help with work there are the county societies, like the one in Bucks, 3700 free beds in the State and many private sanitariums.

Work in Bucks county, Mr. Brazington said, is just getting off to a new and better start. With the appointment of an experienced nurse as field secretary, and the use of a car and other up-to-date methods, he said, the society is in a position to do better work than ever.

Already its survey has found 1199 school child cases of tuberculosis. In several instances these children have been taken from contact with others and put where they may be given treatment and cured.

The danger to children especially is through undernourishment. When resistance is low, the germs that may have been dormant in the body get busy with their destructive work.

To prevent this situation, the society carries on its health work in the schools. Children are examined, weighed and measured, and if they are underweight there is a suspicion that something is wrong, and parents are consulted concerning their diet and habits. Everything that can be done to protect the children from the danger of tuberculosis is undertaken. In this work, the speaker said, the schools are co-operating nicely. Already teachers have asked when the work is to be resumed, because they know the value of it. He also told of the open air clinics and schools that are in the State, 76 in all, to aid the little sufferers to recover.

The society's work in Bucks county is to try to save children from getting the disease and to aid children and adults when they have fallen victim to it.

WOMAN SPEAKS TO GUILD WOMEN OF HER LIFE'S WORK

Edely Branch, Needlework
Guild, Addressed by Mrs.
M. W. Ketchum

IS THE FOURTH EXHIBIT

Total of 1320 Garments Displayed by Organization
at Hawkes' Home

EDGELEY, Nov. 6.—"If any of you want to keep young, continue working for the Needlework Guild, or any other good organization."

Thus did Mrs. M. W. Ketchum, who operates the Kensington Neighborhood House, 3068 Frankford avenue, Kensington, continue to spread her philosophy of life, as she spoke to women interested in the work of the Needlework Guild, as they gathered for the fourth annual exhibition of garments of the Edely Branch yesterday. The exhibition and meeting occurred at the residence of Mrs. Thomas G. Hawkes, here.

Fulfilling an obligation assumed in a promise made to her dying father many years ago, Mrs. Ketchum, is proving that old, old thought—"Life will prove to be just as big in proportion as the windows through which you look at it."

This wonderful, untiring worker or the unfortunate, who unhesitatingly states she has marked 72 years in this world, is much younger in spirit and effort. Through Joseph Stoll, superintendent of the Osteopathic Hospital, Philadelphia, who added to Mrs. Ketchum's remarks, the large group of Guild women learned that through the Kensington Neighborhood Home, hundreds of families are assisted annually. Not only do Mrs. Ketchum and her consecrated workers minister to the bodies of the men, women and children, but to the spirits and souls as well. At Mrs. Ketchum's home, Mr. Stoll told, every room is put to use on Sunday, when Sunday School is conducted. The large living room is utilized, and the smaller rooms of the house are turned into class rooms for the day. Many are the Sunday dinners that are there served to entire families, by which means Mrs. Ketchum is enabled to get close to the destitute, and learn their inmost thoughts and needs.

The soup kitchen with which this remarkable woman is associated, has been operated since 1875. She has been intensely interested for the past 40 years. "It is most worthwhile to help those who are sorely in need," she informed the group, "and the follow-up work means so much more. We are thus enabled to know just how each and every member of a family is carrying on, and can often help or interest. It is just splendid to see them progress after they once get on their feet again."

Mrs. Ketchum stressed the care that must be taken to guard against encouragement of pauperism. "We do not want to spend the money, or distribute the clothing unwisely which you folks give. We want to help these people in the right way. We need that the person who is the most worthy is the most humble. Worthy ones appeal, others demand."

Mr. Stoll told of the Sunday School work that is carried on each Sunday at the Ketchum home and on Monday evenings, and the meetings for men on Thursday nights.

The Needlework Guild garments were frequently referred to by the woman speaker.

Mrs. William O'Dea who presided in the absence of Mrs. William K. Highland, president, mentioned that the gain of 62 over the number of last year. The number credited to the sewing committee is 509, 420 of which the committee made Mrs. Thomas G. Hawkes, honorary president of the local guild, secured the highest number of garments, 219; with Mrs. Theodore B. Megargee second with 163. All garments completed by the sewing committee in the past year were cut by Mrs. Roland Quinn. From money in the shoe fund, 15 pairs of shoes have been purchased during the past twelve months, these being for needy in this vicinity.

The garments on display included clothing for boys and girls, linens, etc. Need for more household linens, such as towels, bedclothing, etc., was stressed by officers of the guild.

A large basket of "mums" was presented to Mrs. Hawkes on behalf of members of the sewing guild's efforts of appreciation of the hostess' token in matters pertaining to the Edely guild.

Greetings were brought to the Edely organization by Mrs. Henry E. Ancker, of Bristol Needlework Guild, who assisted materially in organization of the branch here.

A FIRE DANGER

The vernal impulse to burn brushwood and dead grass makes work for fire departments and neighborhood bucket brigades. Every community has its annual scare from blazes of this sort and is fortunate if it escapes without serious damage. Yet it is futile to preach caution, as he who starts the fire is always quite sure that it will not get out of control. It will be a long time before this hazard can be crossed off the list by fire prevention committees.

While brush fires carefully guarded are a part of the fall clean-up, grass fires are an unnecessary menace. The idea that burning dead grass has more than a fleeting value as a stimulant to vegetation is said by experts to be erroneous. The effect on the burned land, they assert, is deteriorating in the long run. Regardless of whether that is so, a little prairie fire in the neighborhood of frame buildings is an undesirable method of cultivation.

Persons planning to burn brush, the accumulation of household debris and dead grass should first make sure there is no wind blowing and that "fire lanes" separate their fires from buildings and shrubbery to be spared. A little precaution in this direction may prevent a serious fire, and is certain to save much wear and tear on fire apparatus and many gallons of fire company gasoline.

MULTITUDE OF THE GREAT

In the first chapter of "Plutarch's Lives," the author of that imperishable dictionary of ancient biography says that as the geographers of that age added notes to their maps to the effect that beyond their borders nothing lay but sandy deserts or frozen seas, so he, after recounting the lives of the greatest men of the past and passing through the periods in which real history finds a footing, would hold that there is nothing beyond save prodigies and fictions. But he lived and wrote at a time when geography had not encompassed the globe and when there was no press to keep the daily records of the race. The American comprehensive biographer has not to fear that there have been some who have lived beyond the circle of the known and so have escaped notice; his concern is only lest there should be omission of the names of any of the known who ought to be nationally remembered.

American biography cannot be circumscribed in the manner of ancient maps. There are too many men and women in the United States whose deeds or misdeeds deserve perpetuation and the new crop is always large and frequently harvested. No American community is satisfied with itself if it has not produced at least one great man or woman and most of them have justification for such contentment.

The table of contents of the first volume of a new work on American biography begins with an astronomer born in New York and ends with an immigrant Jesuit priest who attained fame as a scientist. Between those are statesmen, educators, scientists, professional folk, a meat packer, pioneer manufacturer, a desperado, a playwright, an organ designer, baseball player, etc.

The masquerade party held at the chapel on Newport Road Saturday evening was one of the most outstanding successes in the history of the chapel. A large crowd gathered, nearly all being masked. The costumes were in many instances gorgeous, unique, and ludicrous. READ THIS FIRST

Katharine Faring, granddaughter of a Russian prince, is the rightful owner of the missing Czarina rubies. Trying to recover them for her, Paul Federoff is murdered at Monksilver, a vacant country house, and Frank Severn is kidnapped and carried there unconscious. His servant, Creyke, is murdered.

Jim Wynter, friend of Severn and of Katharine, tries to rescue Severn, is injured and drugged and awakens in the home of mysterious Dr. Martell. Recovering, he takes Katharine and his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Grayson, to Severn's country home, Beggar's Court. There a search reveals a concealed stairway and a locked door in the ruins of an ancient chapel. The stub of one of Dr. Martell's cigarettes lies on the stairs.

Sant, Severn's lawyer, reluctantly agrees that the door be forced and goes to engage a blacksmith. Wynter and Grayson encounter in a nearby village a man Grayson recognizes as a former Sing Sing convict. Returning to Beggar's Court they find a wall of the ruin collapsed and the secret stairway buried. A little later Wynter sees Dr. Martell's profile in shadow on a wall near Beggar's Court. After dark Wynter again goes to Beggar's Court, entering the grounds stealthily. He sees a light flash in the direction of the boat-house and goes to investigate.

NOW GO ON

CHAPTER XXXV

Before he reached it he knew that someone was inside the boathouse—someone evidently moving there with a flash lamp; and it was through a little hole where a knot of wood had fallen out of one of the boards that a momentary gleam had shown from that moving light.

As he drew nearer, his footsteps soundless on the grass, Jim Wynter could hear the faint furtive movements within. Evidently, the man inside had no suspicion of those nearing footsteps.

Jim crept up, found that knothole in the white painted planking. The building housed a motorboat of modern construction that looked a model of efficiency and strongly enough built to take rough water. And a figure there seemed to be examining this craft with very great care and interest by the aid of a small electric torch, the gleam of which alone broke the darkness inside the boathouse.

At first the figure behind the light was too shadowy for Jim to distinguish his features even faintly. That tiny glowing bulb seemed to intensify the darkness beyond its immediate radius. Could that intent figure be Martin? And if Martin what on earth could he be doing with such evident stealth?

RECOGNITION

Not Martin! Suddenly, as though some faint sound from outside had caught his ears warningly, the stooping man straightened himself with a start, involuntarily swinging his lamp round; and for a second its beam of light touched and revealed a tensely listening face to Jim on the other side of that spy-hole.

Almost the last face that Jim Wynter in that amazed moment would have dreamed of seeing. The man from Sing Sing, John Isham!

But no longer the crippled figure helpless without his crutches; a man standing erect, patently as independent of any such aid as if those crutches were no more than a blind—John Isham!

And almost in that surprising moment of recognition, as though the same uneasy apprehension that Isham's face betrayed had infected him, too, Jim Wynter swung suddenly round, with a faint sound creeping over the edge of silence to his ears. A sound not far away, like the snapping of a dry twig under a passing footstep. And in an instant that warning instinct had swept back on him again; a sense of hidden eyes in the dark, of some stealthy menace looming out of the blind, perilous night.

As he swung round there came a sound scarcely as loud as the popping of a cork.

As he swung round there came a sound scarcely as loud as the popping of a cork. Something sang by his ears, to bury itself in the side of the boathouse not two inches away from him.

And Jim Wynter saw the wisdom of dropping very promptly and full length in the long grass, knowing that a killer was abroad in the grounds of Beggar's Court tonight. That bullet from a weapon fitted with a silencer had been deliberately meant for him and only by a bare two inches had been the margin between life and death.

War declared now on him, too.

Speedy death would have been Jim Wynter's portion then if he had not dropped just when he did. Almost immediately out of the dark encompassing night followed a second shot. The smack of the bullet on the side of the boathouse sounded unnervingly close.

The momentary flash revealed no more than the direction from which the shots had come. The dense blackness under the trees, that the dim misty starlight could not penetrate, screened any signs of movement there.

Only Jim knew that not far away an enemy lurked, a silent stealthily-moving shadow hidden in the deep still shadows, waiting—waiting. That unknown killer, whose unseen presence some instinct in him had sensed earlier near the ruins, who must have dogged him step by step through the trees into the open here by the estuary.

The estuary was at flood-tide, out on the turn, swirling and foaming between wide banks. An effectual means for a dead man with a bullet in him to be disposed of; swept down by the racing current and out into the open sea, a dead man would tell no tales! Hardly a pleasant thought for Jim Wynter, as he crouched there, with every nerve and sense strung up to an almost intolerable strain—but had that been the fate designed for him?

PERIL

A fate that might yet be his. That he was in a position of appalling disadvantage he was only too well aware. But his nerves before now had proved themselves uncommonly steady at close quarters with stark danger and he could trust them not to let him down now.

"Rank had shooting, anyway, to have missed me that first time," he told himself, his habitual cheerfulness reasserting itself even in a situation none too cheerful—"such a target as I must have made."

Now no longer silhouetted against the pale blur of the white-painted boathouse that reflected what little light there was, he was as much hidden from that unknown enemy as that at least was in his favor.

Jim Wynter crouched there, listening with strained ears, not only for sounds of his enemy, but for the sound, too, of the coming of a motor car in the side lane that bordered these grounds, and for the signal of two hoots from the horn that would tell him Bill Grayson was here at last.

Bill's opportune arrival on the scene would ease the situation very considerably.

In his pressing personal worries Jim had almost forgotten the man calling himself John Isham, whom he had surprised just now in the boathouse busy on some furtive business of his own.

The man there, who could have known nothing of what was happening outside—except that without warning a couple of bullets in rapid succession had ripped through the boards of the boathouse as if through paper, and that disturbing excitement were suddenly replacing the peace of the night—had made no sound, betrayed no sign of his presence there after those two shots.

But it was not Isham but Jim Wynter whom that unknown gunman wanted: the man crouching in hiding knew that beyond question. Knew too, that unless he could find cover of sorts before the next move in the game his chances might be very thin indeed.

PROTECTION

Fortunately cover was available close at hand. It was too dark for Jim's eyes to make it out with any certainty, but he remembered noticing that afternoon a fallen giant of a tree that some gale had uprooted lying near the boathouse. After an effort to recall the lie of the land, he began to drag himself very softly and cautiously in the direction he judged it to be. A journey of a few feet only—yet throughout it his senses seemed keyed up almost to the point of torment, prepared for a sudden shot or a rush of feet to tell him his movements had been heard.

night before last—it was a terror. First my mainstays carried away, then the jibs and the hold began filling up. "I got thirteen hundred tons of coal down there—taking it from Newport News to Maine, and the Mojave looked like a letter from home to me last night when she picked us up."

"May we take a picture of you Captain?" I asked.

"Aw, you go on with you . . . you can get a better photo in the boat!" The Mojave's whistle blew, signaling us to come back. As I was climbing over the side, Captain Sweeney called:

"You can tell the captain on the cutter that his officer and men handle a boat better than deep water men." The highest tribute that a shellback can pay to a seafarer.

J. H. Borgey, chief carpenter's mate, took the photographs. He developed them immediately and made prints.

By twilight we were off Graves Light. A powerful tug steamed out to relieve the Mojave of the Deering, and a fleet 75-footer patrol of the Coast Guard came alongside us. I gave the officer in charge of the patrol boat the photographs which he rushed ashore, and then Capt. Parker turned the Mojave around and headed back to sea again.

"You're good luck for us Miss Lowell—in 24 hours we've saved a ship and a crew!"

Not a word about the grilling work—just luck that they got the opportunity to be of service.

That night I went to the movies in the sailors' quarters aft. They were silent. The lights went up between each reel while it was being changed.

The boss piped the 8 o'clock watch on deck. The show was over. A moon, just a thin slice of it, was climbing the sky and I being human and inured with a sense of duty standing on watch, thought kindly thoughts of the service.

Yes, I'm going to join the coast guard!

Miss Mildred Dyer To Play Lead in "Her Song"

Miss Mildred Dyer will play the leading role of "Christina" in the musical play, "Her Song," to be presented on the evenings of November 19th and 20th by students of the high school as their annual musical offering. Miss Dyer's charming personality, sweet simplicity of manner, and above all, her lovely soprano voice, will especially fit her for this important role. "Christina" is the daughter of Emil Kronlein, the old "music master" of the play, who, years before, has been deserted by his wife, Christina's mother. The role of "Christina" must have the sympathy of the audience throughout and this Miss Dyer's qualifications eminently enable her to do.

Another important role is that of "Ann Keely," Christina's friend. She too, is attractive as to personality and must be a talented singer and dancer. Miss Helen Morganti has been well chosen for this part and will more than meet the requirements. The role of Emil, which requires acting of a high order, will be assumed by Robert Wright, who is well known to local audiences from previous appearances. Adele, Christina's mother, who in the play becomes a great stage favorite, will be enacted by Miss Thelma Wallace. This is really a tragic role as Adele's triumph is short lived and her denunciation a sad one.

Comedy is supplied in the character of the three O'Haras—Mr. and Mrs. O'Hara and their son, Harry. These will be capably taken by John McCarthy, Miss Josephine DiLassio, and Arthur Reynolds. Blumberg, the theatrical producer, will be enacted by Rena Swan. Other comedians will be the three stage hands, "Juice," "Props" and "Charlie" the stage carpenter, by Chester Nichols, Ewald Werner, Henry Strecker; Gladys Van Tine, a specialty dancer, Ruth Reitenbaugh; Craig Randall, Christine's lover, George Herman; Paul Gortin, a Broadway matinee idol, Joseph Britton; Blossom, a Broadway stage director, Vincent Galzerano; Mr. Porter, Hadley Springer; Fritz, a music pupil, Sidney Popkin, and the doorman, Leon Schiffer.

There will be choruses of "Bobbed Hair Flappers," "Follies," "Summer Girls," "Midnight Gliders," "Soda Pops," "Valentines," "Artists," "Guests." CARDINAL AND GRAY TO PLAY AT SELLERSVILLE

(By Leon Schiffer)

Receiving a heavy drill in blocking, tackling and punting, the Bristol High School football varsity members are slowly rounding into shape in preparation for Saturday's game with their perennial foe, Sellersville-Perkasie. This week the Cardinal and Gray will again assume the role of "Ramblers," Sellersville-Perkasie having the call for playing the tilt on their gridiron.

During the past week the Bristol mentor has stressed the art of punting and as a result there is a noticeable improvement in the way the punters are handling themselves. As in the past practice sessions, the fundamentals of blocking and tackling have been taught all week and one needs not longer to dwell on this phase of the game.

Although Coach Townsend is doing away with heavy scrimmages in general, the varsity is being put through many a light scrimmage with the Jay-Vees. On the offense the regular varsity squad remains intact, with the squad breaking up and inter-mingling with the Jay Vees on the defense. Incidentally, two new plays have been added this week to the Cardinal and Gray's repertoire.

Yesterday afternoon immediately following practice a short talk was given by the Bristol mentor to the local boys on the subject of "overconfidence." As one knows, overconfidence was one of the greatest factors in last week's game which caused the downfall of the Cardinal and Gray.

A radical change which Coach Townsend has been contemplating for a long while will in all probability be made tomorrow. The change consists of replacing varsity members who have made poor showings so far this season with several members of the Junior Varsity who have shown great promise.

Although the Cardinal and Gray's weak point, the key position will remain untouched, the Bristol mentor has been devising plans which he hopes will be able to cope with Sellersville-Perkasie's famous center rushes.

The local eleven will be greatly handicapped by the loss of Neindorff, stellar tackle who has been forced to the sidelines until the Thanksgiving game due to a bruised wrist. It is also doubtful whether Orazi will play, due to his having stomach trouble. Otherwise the squad will remain intact.

Sellersville-Perkasie this year has one of the strongest football aggregations in years. Coached by Hans Duke, former Ursinus football star, the besieged have amassed a great knowledge and polished technique in regards to the realms of football. Comparing records, Bristol has rolled up 49 points to their opponents' 39 points, while Sellersville-Perkasie has amassed 55 points to their opponents' 25 points.

A though Coach Townsend has already decided on his starting line-up, it will not be announced until Saturday, the day of the game.

Looking down the list of football games scheduled for November 7, four games hold out the promise of being more than usually exciting. The tid-bid of the West Coast will be the University of Southern California's clash with Stanford at Los Angeles. Their last battle ended in a 41-12 victory for U. S. C. and this year, with Shaver knocking everything out of his way, they hope to repeat. However, Campbell, of Stanford, is an obstacle that will have to be overcome. In the Middle West, Minnesota meets Northwestern at Evanston in an endeavor to wipe out Northwestern's 27-6 victory of last year. Kenneth McDougall is the Minnesotan's white-haired boy, while the star of Northwestern

Gotham's Grids Sizzle

By HARDIN BURNLEY

GOtham's gridsters will be entertaining out-of-town visitors in a big way this week-end. Although the spotlight will be centered on the N. Y. U. Georgetown festivities, three other grid parties in New York City, this Saturday, will vie with it for public interest. Fordham tackles the University of Detroit; Columbia, the University of Virginia, and Manhattan, Catholic University of Washington.

Fordham-Detroit brings together two of the fightingest of football outfits and should be a knock-down, drag-out affair from beginning to end. The Rams won last year by a touchdown, and they are likely to repeat. It would not be surprising, however, if Gus Dorais' Detroiters make the issue doubtful until the final whistle.

In Capt. Murphy, Fordham features one of the most powerful running backs with his 190 pounds of brawn and energy, marvelous knee action, and a pair of legs which never stop churning until he is completely down. He is well supported by a group of ball carriers, particularly Pepper and Zapatas, and a smart field general, Jack Fisher.

Manhattan, under the Notre Dame auspices of John Law, is making strides toward gridiron greatness. Law who used to captain Rockne's Ramblers, has instilled in his charges some real spirit, and a finesse in the execution of their plays which is beginning to be reminiscent of Rockne's clan.

Law was one of the greatest guards in the nation. Despite his 165-pounds he was a tartar on the defense, and the key of interference in the Rambler's running attack.

Columbia should take Virginia. Lou Little has greater potentialities in the squad this year than ever before, some of which scoring elements were flashed in the victory over Dartmouth.
